

COURAGE, COURAGE, COURAGE

"Courage to you. Courage to us in this time of great change. Courage to us as we embody a faith that is real, relevant, and meaningful: a faith that matters. Courage to us at the edges, margins, and ends of the world, where we stand vigil with what is unraveling and present with those who are suffering. Courage to us as we resist false hope and empty promises. Courage to us to live the heart of the gospel, where it is needed most—now and together.

This is spiritual work, and we are up to the task. Speak this word to one another, and let it settle into your bones and being for the work of transformation we already are in."

Courage, courage, courage. "
